FOREWORD

Geological Fieldwork, 1980 (Paper 1981-1) marks the seventh year of this annual publication which is intended to acquaint the interested public with the preliminary results of field studies by the Geological Division as soon as possible after the field season. Most reports in this publication were written without the benefit of extensive laboratory or office studies and, to speed publication, most of the figures have been draughted by the authors.

To make field data and interpretations more readily available the Division publishes preliminary maps and has begun to emphasize a paper series. For example, a paper will be released soon on sand and gravel deposits in the lower mainland.

As in previous issues, Geological Fieldwork, 1980 is divided into sections: Metallic Investigations, Coal Investigations, Applied Geology, and Other Investigations. The Other Investigations section consists mainly of reports by graduate students and professors of the University of British Columbia. The reports deal with programs aligned with the objectives of the Geological Division which were funded in part by the Division.

The geographic distribution of reports in the publication is shown on Figure 1 and keyed to the table of contents.

The cover photograph depicts a geologist measuring sections in the northeast coalfield.

Output of this publication was coordinated by W. J. McMillan and production editing and layout by Rosalyn J. Moir with the assistance of Geological Division draughting office under the supervision of J. Armitage.
